IV. CURRENT RESEARCH ACTIVITIES

- Moving to Work. Analysis of the effects of the Atlanta Housing Authority's Moving to Work Demonstration. This six-year evaluation focuses on assessing the effects of the MTW Demonstration on AHA-assisted households (public housing, mixed-income housing, project-based rental assistance, housing vouchers), the effects on the neighborhoods affected by public housing transformation over the past 15 years, and the overall trends in poverty deconcentration in the city of Atlanta. The evaluation includes a quasi-experimental design that compares the trajectories of AHA-assisted families (MTW Demonstration) with families assisted through the Housing Authority of DeKalb County (conventional public housing assistance) via a three-wave panel study.
- Implementation of the Affordable Care Act. Part of a national network of social scientists who will be tracking and analyzing the implementation of the Affordable Care Act in 35 states. Phase I of this comparative field network study, which will include two rounds of field research, focuses on the design and implementation of health insurance exchanges in their various flavors (federal, state, partnership) and follows each state's experience during the first two enrollment periods. In addition to serving as the lead Georgia field research associate, I am working with the central research team (Rockefeller Institute of Government, State University of New York at Albany; Fels Institute of Government, University of Pennsylvania; and the Brookings Institution, Center on Health Policy) to advise on construction of the field report forms, data coding and analysis, and cross-site analysis strategies.
- Making Collaboration Work: Local Strategies to Reduce Poverty and Increase Opportunity. Book manuscript in preparation with Robert Stoker. Our primary argument is that collaborative governance provides a strategic approach for cities to weave together existing and emergent cross-sector collaborations and partnerships to more effectively foster a range of coordinated public policy solutions that provide increased opportunities for city residents (e.g., linking housing and community development, education, job creation/economic development, job training, and transportation, among others). We present empirical evidence through in-depth case studies, city vignettes, and a more systematic assessment of the breadth and depth of collaborative governance in the nation's 50 largest cities.

V. PUBLICATIONS

A) Books

Collaborative Governance for Urban Revitalization: Lessons from Empowerment Zones (with Robert P. Stoker) (Cornell University Press, 2014). Examination of the effects of collaborative governance on urban revitalization outcomes, focusing on the six cities that were designated as federal urban empowerment zones in 1994. Our analysis shows that local governance arrangements and processes, local capacity, and local culture were the key determinants in the effectiveness of EZ-funded neighborhood revitalization initiatives.

Federal Policymaking and the Poor: National Goals, Local Choices and Distributional Outcomes. (Princeton University Press, 1993). Examines the relationships between federal decisionmaking systems and the distributional impacts of public policies. Analyzes the extent to which funds under the federal Community Development Block Grant program were targeted to the poor through examination of the national distribution of CDBG funds under the entitlement and discretionary portion of the program as well as local uses of funds and their distributional impacts in eight communities in the Chicago metropolitan area.

VIII. PUBLIC SERVICE

(Founding) Executive Director, The Providence Plan, Inc., Providence, Rhode Island
December 1992 - June 1994

The Providence Plan, Inc., is a 501(c)3 nonprofit corporation created in 1992 by the city of Providence and the State of Rhode Island to direct the revitalization of Providence. The organization is jointly funded by the city and the state, and governed by a board of directors of 10 members, five of whom were appointed by the mayor and five by the governor. The Providence Plan is a partnership among the city, the state, and a consortium of area colleges and universities dedicated to developing and implementing a comprehensive strategy for alleviating poverty in the capital city of Providence. Its six principal goals are: (1) promotion of affordable housing, (2) improving the quality of the public schools; (3) increasing employment opportunities for city residents; (4) enhancing neighborhood safety; (5) revitalizing the downtown; and (6) retaining the middle class. The Providence Plan has pursued its mission through the development of a comprehensive Geographic Information System and a community-based strategic planning model which culminated in the submission in June 1994 of Providence's application to the federal government for designation as an Enterprise Community under the Clinton Administration's Empowerment Zones and Enterprise Communities program. In December 1994, Providence was designated as one of 60 federal Enterprise Communities.

IX. ADMINISTRATIVE EXPERIENCE

(Founding) Executive Director, Center for Community Partnerships
Emory University
February 2000 – August 2015

The Center for Community Partnerships (previously named the Office of University-Community Partnerships) was established in 2000 by then Provost Rebecca Chopp with the goal of enhancing the integration of Emory's teaching, research, and service missions with an emphasis on serving the greater Atlanta community. The CFCP was Emory's central resource for coordinating, aligning, and enhancing much of the university's community engagement and outreach through scholarship, learning, and service. Working closely with a wide range of partners across Emory's nine schools and in the community, the CFCP assisted many ongoing programs as well as implemented a number of new initiatives and programs. As a result of the CFCP's guidance and leadership, Emory was the recipient in 2008 of the Presidential Award from the President's Higher Education Community Service Honor Roll, the highest federal recognition a college or university can receive for its commitment to volunteering, service-learning and civic engagement.

(Founding) Director, Policy Analysis Laboratory
A. Alfred Taubman Center for Public Policy and American Institutions
Brown University; Providence, Rhode Island
1987 – 1992

The Policy Analysis Laboratory provided research and technical assistance to a wide range of state and local governments and nonprofit organizations in the greater Providence area. Among the topics examined were affordable housing, homelessness, and the development of a community information system based on Geographic Information Systems and state and local administrative data to assist a broad group of state and local stakeholders better understand the issues affecting Providence neighborhoods and the well-being of their residents.
